INTERFAITH HOUSING COLLABORATIVE

Together, we make home possible.

When we catch hold of the vision that all people have a home, amazing things start happening. For a generation, neighbors across the Twin Cities metro have believed that home should be a reality for every single one of us. So we've worked together, prayed together, sat in city council meetings together, served meals together, written postcards together – rolled up our sleeves together to move closer and closer to that vision.

And thanks to your generosity over this past year, we're poised to rewrite the story of home for a new generation.

Great River Landing is opening doors for men coming out of incarceration and into stable employment and the chance at a new chapter – the first homes of their kind in Minnesota.

Families who have experienced homelessness will be able to live and grow in a community they love with trusted, professional case managers by their side because we launched Vista 44 in Hopkins, Prairie Pointe in Shakopee, and Emerson Village in North Minneapolis.

Families in our shelter program have stayed safe, warm, and well-fed in the midst of the worst pandemic and economic collapse in memory because we adapted our model and kept them connected to essential resources and hospitality.

550,000 Minnesotans who aren't receiving the rent subsidy they qualify for would get one through Bring It Home, MN, legislation Beacon is organizing to pass at the state legislature. This bold, game-changing public policy goes upstream to prevent homelessness so all Minnesotans can find stability at home.

Even in the midst of this progress, though, it remains evident there is so much more to do. This year, we've been confronted in visceral ways by the abiding discrimination against our neighbors of color in society at large and in the housing systems we're trying to change. Homelessness has become more visible as millions had wages cut and as tents fill our parks because neighbors have nowhere else to go. We've encountered ugly and false narratives about people with low incomes. We continue to wrestle with the ramifications of our vision when we say "ALL" people have a home and how that disrupts the status quo – and compels us forward.

But thanks to your generosity, we are moving forward. We're in the midst of raising $12 million to fund our work over three years. Together, we are building a strong foundation for home that will create the Minnesota we long to see. A Minnesota we're proud to hand to the next generation. A Minnesota where home isn't just possible: it's part of each and every story.

Thank you for your gifts this year.

We can't wait to see what else we can do together.
